GDG Algiers ER: Review the Sponsorship Email

Oct 24, 2026 · @ch

The email has 14 problems, mostly generic wording, a vague and mismatched ask, benefits that could overpromise, and pressure with no clear next step; the rewrite below fixes each one.

Problems found

#	Problem	Why it matters	Fix
1	The subject line is empty.	Many readers decide from the subject alone, and an empty one looks careless or like spam.	A specific subject naming the event, date and the company.
2	It opens with "Dear Sir/Madam".	It shows the email was sent to many companies and not read by the right person.	Address a named contact, found through research.
3	The company is never named and the praise is generic ("perfect partner", "strong presence").	Flattery with no evidence is easy to spot and gives no reason why this company should care.	One real sentence about what that company does that fits the event.
4	The event has no date, venue or city, only "in four weeks".	The reader cannot plan, check availability or judge the event.	Give the exact date, venue and schedule outline.
5	The audience claim ("more than 500") has no support.	A number with no basis is not credible and does not show GDG Algiers' track record.	Back it with facts: active since 2011 and the community's reach (Facebook 20k+, Instagram 20k+, LinkedIn 11k+, Discord 4k+).
6	The email talks about what GDG wants, not what the company gains.	Partnerships must create value for both sides, and a reader asks "what is in it for me?" first.	Lead with the benefit to the partner, tied to their interests.

#	Problem	Why it matters	Fix
7	It asks for a fixed 60,000 DZD with no reason or breakdown.	The amount feels random, and it does not match the offer sheet, whose packages start at 200,000 DA.	Ask for a specific need, or use the package sheet, and explain what the money pays for.
8	It asks only for money, though the team's needs include venue, internet, catering, printing, prizes and speakers.	The company may prefer to give something other than cash, and the email closes that door.	Ask for one or two needs that match the company, and say the package can be adapted.
9	The benefits are vague: "a booth" and "the possibility of having a speaker".	It is unclear what is promised, and promising a booth or speaker that the team has not secured is overpromising.	List only deliverables the team can deliver, marked as subject to confirmation.
10	"Let us know as soon as possible" and a deadline of the end of this week.	The pressure feels pushy, and the deadline does not fit a four-week timeline.	Propose a call and a reasonable decision date.
11	There is no clear next step.	"Looking forward to your positive response" assumes a yes and gives no easy action.	Suggest a 15-minute call with two time options.
12	The proposal is only an attachment.	Cold emails with attachments are often not opened, and the key points should be in the body.	Summarize the offer in the email and attach a short 1 to 2 page proposal.
13	The signature has a placeholder number and a fake LinkedIn link ("adam-example").	It damages credibility and makes it hard to reply or verify who is writing.	A real phone number, a working LinkedIn profile, a role title and the website.
14	The email is a wall of short unconnected lines.	It is tiring to read, and the main message is buried.	Short paragraphs: who we are, the event, the fit, the ask, the next step.

Subject: Partnership proposal: GDG Algiers Tech Connect on [date], and [Company]

Hello [Contact name],

I am [Full name] from the External Relations team at GDG Algiers, a Google Developer Group in Algiers that has been active since 2011. I am writing to you because [one specific reason, for example: "[Company] recently launched a student hackathon / is hiring junior developers"].

On [date] at [venue], we are organizing GDG Algiers Tech Connect, a one-day event with workshops, a panel, networking and a company corner. We expect more than 500 developers, students and tech professionals. Our community also follows us online: Facebook 20k+, Instagram 20k+, LinkedIn 11k+ and Discord 4k+.

We think this could help [Company] [meet young developers / recruit interns / present its products to a technical audience]. We are looking for support with [one or two needs, for example catering or prizes] and can adapt the package to what matters most to you. In return we can offer [for example: your logo on our materials, social media mentions and a space in the company corner], and a short talk slot if the programme allows, to be confirmed with you in writing.

Would you have 15 minutes for a call on [date option 1] or [date option 2]? I have attached a two-page proposal with the details.

Best regards, [Full name] External Relations Team, GDG Algiers [Real phone number] | [LinkedIn profile] | gdgalgiers.dev
