GDG Algiers ER Task 03: Two Sponsors, One Conflict

Oct 21, 2026 · @ch

I would not give both companies the title "main partner"; I would give each a clearly named role at the same tier, with a fair, written rule for logo order.

What I would do

1. Check what each company agreed to in writing and whether "main partner" or first logo position was already promised to anyone. In the offer sheet, the title sponsor appears only in the Platinum package (800,000 DA), and there is one title.
2. Call both, thank them, and propose two separate roles at the same tier: for example "Official Telecom Partner" and "Official Internet Partner", with the internet provider also named as the venue Wi-Fi partner.
3. Set a transparent logo rule: same size, side by side, with the order alternating by medium (alphabetical on the website, reversed on printed material, swapped between opening and closing day).
4. Offer one honest upgrade path: Platinum is open to both on equal terms, but there is one title sponsor, and it goes to the first company that confirms it in writing.
5. Send both the same written confirmation of benefits, deliverables and visibility.

Why I would make this decision

Only one logo can be physically first and only one company can be the main partner, so promising either would be overpromising. Giving each its own category lets both feel like a lead partner without a false ranking. Equal terms and a visible rule protect both relationships and GDG Algiers' credibility, in line with the guidelines on mutual value, no overpromising and clear agreements.

What solution or alternative I would propose

If both still insist on rank, I would split visibility instead of rank: one gets the opening ceremony mention, the other the closing, or each gets a dedicated zone (the Wi-Fi network named after one, the networking lounge or badges for the other). If neither accepts, I would keep the sponsor that best fills the budget gap and offer the other a smaller package, rather than promise anything we cannot deliver.

What I would do differently in the future

I would state in the package sheet that there is one title sponsor, define category roles and the logo-order rule, and ask at the first meeting what each sponsor expects. I would check for direct competitors before confirming two partners, and sign agreements before announcing anyone. A simple visibility map (who gets what, and where) would stop the same benefit being promised twice.
